The amount donated by the Jaycees will be used to convert radio equipment on the SWAB vehicle so that squad members can communicate directly with Lynchburg General Hospital if need is indicated. S.C.S. Backs Conservation

"Virginia's farmlands still take a beating from spring rains," David N. Grimwood, State Conservationist for the USDA Soil Conservation Service, said in Richmond today. "A great amount of progress has been made in the forty-year history of the Soil Conservation Service," Grimwood stated, "but farmers and other landowners still lose large amounts of soil each year."

The Soil Conservation Service was created forty years ago this month on April 27, 1935. It was one of the first agencies in the nation to be concerned with the protection of our soil and water resources. Grimwood pointed out. "We've made a lot of progress in brining about improved land use and in applying conservation measures to the land. We have a continuing job of adapting new technology to changing farming methods."

Grimwood is calling upon employees of his own agency, officials of Virginia's soil and water conservation districts, and other civic leaders in Virginia to give high priority to helping farmers carry out planned conservation programs on their farms.

"It's a double-barreled problem. Erosion damages the productive capacity of farmland, and the product of erosion - silt - damages our streams, lakes, ponds, and reservoirs." The benefits of erosion control are double barreled too, Grimwood said. "Soil conservation helps keep our waters clean. And by making and keeping our land productive, it helps put money in the bank."
